Resilience Based Clinical Supervision

Social Care Resilience-based Clinical Supervision

Do you know any nurses working in social care – please encourage them to apply to do our FREE Resilience-based clinical supervision (RBCS) programme

FoNS was commissioned to offer up to 1000 places on the RBCS programme to registered nurses or registered nursing associates working in the social care sector. This includes domiciliary, community and care homes.

To date we have had 335 people complete the programme.

We still have over 500 places to offer...so if you know anyone who may like to do the RBCS programme please register now.

We have a whole host of cohorts starting at different times on offer ready for filling in September and October - places are filling fast!

Care Show in Birmingham

Registration for the Care Show Birmingham, taking place at NEC Birmingham on 9-10 October, is now open.

Free-to-attend for social and healthcare professionals, Care Show Birmingham is the largest gathering of the care community, bringing together professionals from all over the country looking to collaborate and find innovative solutions to improve social care.

The conference programme includes a bigger focus on policy, regulation, and funding across the sector, both local authority and private equity, and the latest updates on ongoing issues such as international recruitment, sustainability, and the new Single Assessment framework from CQC. New for 2024 is an increased focus on learning disabilities and environmental social governance (ESG).

You can also meet a wide range of nurses working in social care and staff from FoNS.

Have you completed an RBCS programme and are attending the event? If so we would love for you to meet the staff from FoNS and share your experience in the nurses lounge. Respond to this email if you would like to know more.

Primary Care Nursing: How to Boost Well-being and Build Resilience

In case you missed it, RBCS feature in RCNi's Primary Health Care Journal. An editorial about restorative clinical supervision and how this can support the well-being and resilience of nurses within primary care.
